MARKET WAS DULL. List Developed a Sudden Weakness in the Final Hour.

Another Year, it is intimated That Ho Will Retire.

Sporting authorities at New Haven are asking the question: Who will head the Yele football coaching system next year? This question is uppermost on the tonsue of every Yale football lover, and among the groups who form the fifteen coaches who are in New Haven at Yale's board of airaltary to finish the season of 1915 it is a constant topic for debate.

Although the contract of Frank Hingay as head coach has another year to run, it is known that he will retire when the curtain drops on the present season with the game in the Cambridges stadium on Nov. 20.

Capt. Aleck Wilson, in making his statement to the newspapers, pointed but that one of the troubles with the Yile eleven this fall had been the fact that the coaches, with the exception of Hinkey, have been players who have been graduated from Yale the past year are two and who consequently have been graduated from Yale the past year and expecience on Yale whening teams, Yale has not won both its important games since 1902, and no member of today's stock market was its relative duliness. YALE-COLUMBIA ROW

For First Time in Nearly Forty Years -Both Have Good Crews.

FRIDAY AT NEW HAVEN

Two of the most polished crews that ever sat in shells will fight it out over a mile and seven-eighths course in New Haven harbor next Friday afternoon, when the varsity eights of Columbia and Yale come together for the first time in nearly forty years. But what perhaps, is more interesting, is the fact that these two smooth combinations are working on diametrically opposite lines as regards both rowing and rigging.

Columbia's stroke is smoother, more wheel-like one part running into the next without the semblance of a hitch or pause, while Yale's to a certain extent is cut up into sections.

with the hands close together—touching, in fact—while Yale has a hand's breadth between them. Undoubtedly the former method makes for more leverage, but it shorten the reach. Yale's plan of placing the inside hand nearer the rowlock allows of a greater arc of a circle toward the stern with the hand end of the oar. While the inside hand greater the car While the inside hand grasps the car firmly. Nickalls has taught his men to use the fingers of the outside one deftly in order to get all there is in the reach. Two other advantages are a better control of the oar and a less contracted chest at all stages of the stroke. Neither has the advantage in keeping an even keel. Yale recently did a piece in vey rough water and going with the wind—the hardest kind of with the wind—the hardest kind of rowing—and the shell might have been a canal boat as far as any rolling was apparent. When the boat goes off the keel power goes out of the men.

FOR PRINCETON GAME. Tom Shevlin Developing an Entirely New Offensive Plan.

New Haven, Conn., Nov. 8. — The small army of Yale football coaches, headed by Tom Shevlin as field marshal, today began final preparation for the Delivers of the Prince headed by Tom Shevlin as field marshal, today began final preparation for the Princeton and Harvard games.
Despite the defeat by Brown, the Blue showed considerable improvement over previous games, although a great amount of work remains to be done in order to whip the eleven into a team that will approach the Ell standard.
Today's practice consisted of two hours
of signal work, to accustom the team to the entirely new offensive plan adopted by Shevlin.

Boston, Nov. 8.—Eleven riders representing as many trams started the annual six-day bicycle race on the Arena track today. In addition to a number of veterans, the field includes some young racers whose performances will be watched with particular interest as the contest is considered a preliminary training for the race at New York a few weeks later. The teams will ride ten hours each day. The list of contestants includes Alfred Grenda, the speedy Tasmanian, his team-mate, Fred Hill of Watertown, who were favorites in the early betting; McNamara and Spears, Verri and Corry, Grim and Linart, Bell and Maginn, Cameron and Kaiser, Root and Hanley, Walthour and Carman, Dupuy and Moran, Eaton and Madden, Sullivan and Holbrook. It is expected that frequent sprints will enliven the racing, as prizes are offered for special miles each day.

Just before midnight, after nearly eight hours of racing, all of the teams except Sullivan and Holbrook had gone 177 miles and three laps. The latter was one lap behind.

An educational authority once remarked during the course of a lecture the "The faculty of cuccessful teaching is not always possessed by the brightest scholar." Disciples desiring elucidation are referred to the case of Messrs. Rush and Hinkey.
